SYNOPSIS

Margot Speary finds that her improvident father's book, "How To Live Like Primitive Man" has no information as to how to keep two people alive in the winter of a mountain wilderness, she resorts to cave girl methods. Her depredations carry her to the hunting lodge of a cultured New York family, whose son, Divvy, is undergoing throes of anguish because of an engagement to a woman he doesn't love. He finds Margot making raids on his storehouse, and falls in love with her.

Baptiste, the half breed Indian guide samples the wine in the cellar, which results in his discharge. He fires the lodge in the woods for revenge, and with the mercury some twenty degrees below zero, the family is forced out of bed into the deep drifted snow of the wilderness. They take refuge in the cave girl's lair.

Elsie, Divvy fiancee, decides she will fight to retain him. The family is marooned in the wilderness. Elsie discovers a boat hidden in the woods on the banks and accuses Margot of hiding it, in order to keep Divvy with her. So insulting does she become, that the cave girl picks up an axe and smashes the boat to splinters, saying "We 'll see who will have him."

Elsie, straying from the cave girl's home, attired in boys' clothing in imitation of Margot, is mistaken for the cave girl by Baptiste. He starts to make love to her, and on finding his mistake apologizes. The city-bred girl conspires with Baptiste to kidnap Margot. She lures the "cave girl" to Baptiste's cave by a ruse. When the cave girl arrives, Elsie tells her the truth and advises her to marry Baptiste. Margot laughs her to scorn and Baptiste infuriated seizes the girl and swears he will abduct her, and force her to marry him. A struggle follows and Margot is conquered. Baptiste binds her, throws her in his canoe and disappears. Elsie sustains a change of heart and runs for Divvy, telling him the truth.

A mad rush through the wilderness by Divvy results in an encounter between him and Baptiste near the brink of a huge waterfall. During the struggle, the canoe which has been tied to the bank, breaks loose and with Margot helpless in it, floats rapidly towards the falls. Divvy beats Baptiste and starts for the falls. Baptiste follows, but is killed by a snow slide. Divvy snatches his sweetheart from the canoe as it goes over the brink.

Elsie realizes she has lost and wishes Divvy and Margot happiness.
